Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Saturday 06 Feb 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Turning very cold, snow in places.

Today:
Further snow across eastern Scotland, falling to lower levels with time. Elsewhere, some brightness in the south and west before bands of rain move westwards, turning to sleet and snow later as much colder air arrives.

Tonight:
Sleet and snow clearing southwestwards across England and Wales before persistent snow arrives in the southeast, turning heavy later. Clear spells and snow showers across Scotland and northern England. Cold.

Sunday:
Very cold with a biting northeasterly wind. Snow across southeast England, heavy at times across East Anglia with large accumulations and drifting. Sunny spells and snow showers in the north.

Outlook for Monday to Wednesday:
Remaining very cold with further snow showers mainly affecting eastern areas. Strong easterly winds will give a significant wind chill and penetrating frosts, with some places below freezing all day.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.